Korea Financial Flows – February 2025

The NPS takes the steering wheel

The balance-of-payment (BoP) data for Dec-2025 shows a second month of the NPS engaging in net selling of foreign securities. In Dec-2025, the NPS sold US$ 1.7bn (almost all in foreign equity), following the large decline of US$ 4bn US$ in Nov-2025 (Exhibit 25). Recall, In Dec-2024, the NPS publicly committed to increasing its strategic hedging ratio which previously stood at 0% (see report: Asia FI & FX Strategy Watch: NPS's FX policy: a review 02 December 2024). An increase in the NPS's strategic hedge ratio will result in increased forward selling, as opposed to spot selling.

Outside assisting with supporting the KRW, due to the structural underperformance of KOSPI versus MSCI World throughout 2024, the NPS is reallocating to domestic equities as it hits the lower limit in its holdings in Korean equities. According to our estimation, in Nov-24, the asset weight of domestic equities in the NPS portfolio fell to 11.9% or 3.5% underweight versus their 2024 year-end target (Exhibit 34).

The sizable underweight is resulting in the NPS to buy domestic equities in large quantity, and also helps explains the recent net sale of foreign securities. In Dec-2024 and Jan-2025, the NPS net bought US$ 1.5bn in domestic equities resulting in the NPS to be largest net buyer of Korean equities during that period as foreign investor on net sold (Exhibit 9).

Korean government actions will likely stabilize KRW

The KRW reached its bottom in late-Dec 2024 and has stabilized due to the coordinated efforts of the NPS and BoK. However, the rally of the DXY following US trade tensions with Canada and Mexico resulted in USDKRW to raise back to 1,460 before retracing. This shows, the KRW remains captive to abrupt movements in the US$, and with trade risks still looming, we do not think it is yet time to turn bullish on Asian currencies.

Year-to-date, foreign investors remain net sellers of Korean equities, with outflows concerned in the electrics sector due to continued weakness in Samsung Electronics (Exhibit 5). With global trade tensions on the rise, foreign investors remain cautious on Korean equities despite the KOSPI valuation remains attractive with P/E at 12 versus last 15-year average at 15.3.

We stay long USDKRW (entry: 1,440; current: 1,453; see report: EM Alpha: Long USDKRW after the relief rally) given our general bearish view on Asian currencies and the risk of trade tensions with the US rising in Asia.
